Rich David announced his candidacy for Binghamton Mayor Thursday night.

David, was former Executive Assistant to the Mayor under Rich Bucci and is now the public affairs officer at BCC.

He also formed his own investment company, Confluence Enterprises, which has put about 1 million dollars into the area. David says he'll run a positive, grassroots campaign.

And, says it's time to get back to the basics, which is his campaign slogan.

David says, "We must get back to the basics and focus on core functions of city government, functions such as police and fire protection, sanitation, snow removal, code enforcement, street reconstruction, water service and a host of others. We need to reevaluate and streamline city services. Quite simply, we need to reduce expenses and do more with less." > For more info log onto richdavidformayor.com.

David also says he has support of not only his ticket - the Republicans, but also from some democrats and independents.
